Code Rebel that, as a result of efforts to pump the price of Code Rebel, which was pumped from an opening price -- again, I may not have the numbers perfect here, but I believe it opened at about $5 and went to a high within the first two weeks of $44.

As a result of that, these defendants who had been given shares for no consideration ended up with shares that were worth millions, if not tens of millions of dollars, all in connection with this scheme I think to do two things: One, to create liquidity, to create this roll-up financial services entity; and two, to take small amounts of money and exponentially increase its purport and facial value by recycling bonds and using the bonds when there was really no underlying value, by pumping the stock price and having shares that sort of didn't have an accurate value.

So, in our view, the Code Rebel piece of this is all a part and parcel of the securities fraud scheme that is charged. That's why the Code Rebel conduct is referenced in the complaint. That is a short version of sort of what I expect the evidence will show at trial.

THE COURT: All right. Two more: Defendant Cooney's involvement in financial transactions relating to Jason Galanis' residence at 1920 Bel Air, Los Angeles, California.

MS. MERMELSTEIN: Jason Galanis lived at 1920 Bel Air. It was a home used in many of Jason Galanis' frauds. It was, as your Honor may recall in the Tagliaferri case, sold to investors as a purported investment opportunity.

At a point in time, the home came to be sort of paid for not under Jason Galanis' own name but under various intermediary names, and Cooney served a role in funneling money to the house.

I think that his willingness to serve as a front person for Jason Galanis, his willingness to act in Jason Galanis' sted to cover up the true ownership, to allow Jason Galanis to live in a $10,000,000 mansion is all evidence of his knowledge and intent, in broad strokes, of getting into bed with Jason Galanis.

The idea that he in good faith thought Jason Galanis was a good guy and relied on him is very much undercut by his participation in this related fashion in funneling money to Jason Galanis' lavish lifestyle.

THE COURT: Lastly, evidence that the defendants were engaged in efforts to induce an additional Native American tribal entity to issue bonds referred to as the Wisconsin or Rosebud bonds, the proceeds of which were, among other purposes, to be used by Bonwick to repurchase Wakpamni bonds from complaining pension fund investors.

MS. MERMELSTEIN: I think that sort of speaks for itself, your Honor. The evidence shows that following the four rounds of Wakpamni bonds, the defendants, unsatisfied, went out to do it again.

One of the reasons to do that was, as usual, to give themselves the liquidity they needed. In part the liquidity they needed here was that the evidence shows pension fund clients of Atlantic Hughes flipped out when they learned they had Wakpamni bonds in their account that they had not consented to and said, get them out, or we're going to the authorities.

The efforts to get them out required the ability to buy them back, and the idea was that Bonwick, another one of the entities involved in the roll-up and who your Honor may recall some of the Wakpamni bonds were used there as net capital, was going to buy them back using money from this next endeavor.

I think it's relevant as direct evidence because that effort to keep the thing going and cover it up by buying back the bonds is direct evidence of the scheme, but there is also a kind of modus operandi here about efforts to do it again, even after all the problems with the first one. So that's the basic lay of the land there.

THE COURT: All right. Yes.

MR. SCHWARTZ: With respect to this last one, the notice does not identify who was allegedly involved in this other than the defendants.

Was it all of the defendants in the government's view?

MS. MERMELSTEIN: Your Honor, I don't know that I'm prepared to answer on the fly if it is literally all of them, but I'm happy to get the defendants an answer.

THE COURT: But you're happy to?

MS. MERMELSTEIN: Get the defendants an answer.

THE COURT: Yes.

MS. SIKES: Your Honor, I just want to point out on behalf of Ms. Morton that maybe one of those 404(b) issues that you just went through related to Ms. Morton, and that was the SEC ADV that was really about Hughes and Atlantic and not even specifically Ms. Morton because she wasn't the only defendant at that company.

And this just indicates how prejudicial this 404(b) evidence will be for her, and a limiting instruction will be no remedy to help her in this scenario. The number of limiting instructions, not only because of the complexity of the underlying scheme alleged here, but also with the number of defendants in this case, the number of 404(b) applying to certain defendants and not others, especially with Ms. Morton in the crosshairs of all of it, she cannot overcome that sort of prejudice.

THE COURT: Let's do this: Let's set up briefing on the 404(b) issues.

Who wants to go first? That's the question you were asking Mr. Schwartz.

MS. MERMELSTEIN: Your Honor, I think two points on that. To be clear -- and with respect to comments by Ms. Morton -- the government's view is that virtually none of this is in fact 404(b). It is in fact direct evidence of the crime, and it is therefore admissible against Ms. Morton in a stand-alone trial with exceptions.

I don't think Mr. Cooney's lying to City National, for example, comes in in a trial just of Ms. Morton. I don't think that's kind of spill-over prejudice, given the egregiousness of Ms. Morton's criminal conduct here, that that's any kind of problem.

With respect to briefing on the issue, we're happy to do whatever your Honor wants, but I think that we've now given a fairly fulsome description of what we think. I think it comes in, and if the defendants want to move to preclude it, they should do so.

MR. SCHWARTZ: As reluctant as I am to give the government the last word, I disagree with that. I think if they want to rely on this, even in the alternative as 404(b) evidence, they have an obligation to move on it.

If they're claiming that this is direct evidence of the charged crimes, then they have to articulate a basis for that. For some of that they have sketched that out today. For some of it they have simply told us what evidence they would intend to introduce.

But I think that the government ought to begin by
